A DICTIONARY OF USAGE.

The Great Work of the French Academy Which Will Never Be Completed. The principal occupation of the Academy, pursued without cessation, and having in its completion but a perpetual recommencement, has been the dictionary. I already hear the exclamation: "The dictionary! But that is surely a joke! The Academy will never finish it. After 250 years it has not yet completed the letter A!" I will therefore endeavor to dispel the confusion existing in many minds. The Academy has two dictionaries. One of these, which was begun in 1778, is the "Historical Dictionary," whose plan was suggested by Voltaire. It is a compilation of etymology and history, and of the variations in the significance of words set forth in numerous examples as attested by every French writer inclusively since the fifteenth century. Although this dictionary bery. Case on trial before the court has in fact only reached the letter be completed. The Academy decided,

Wright is putting the old jected to modification. The sense of ment, as "telegram" or "bicyclet," or a modern thought must find expression, as "decentralization" or pessimism." It is the same with orthography, in which the constant tendency is toward simplification. In the seventeenth century one wrote, "il debvoit;" in the eighteenth century, "il devoit;" today we write, "il devait." The dictionary is framed as a standard, and hence, like a veritable labor of Penelope, must be begun again as soon as it is finished. In the matter of orthography the dictionary of the Academy is an authority in all institutions of learning, and it would be almost an impossibility for a printing office to diverge therefrom in spelling. The office of the Academy is not to create but to register words of pure language and such as are usually employed, and while it acknowledges the privilege of all to create new words it retains the right to exclude neclogisms from the dictionary wherever it may judge them to be barbarian or of very restricted usage. The work of this department is carried on by six members, named paid in cash on the 24th day of | for life, who, assisted by the perpetual secretary, prepare the work. How the Great Penguin Hatches. It may interest you to know that the great penguin of the southern circle, standing with its head as high as a man's waist, hatches its eggs in a peculiar manner. These are not on after the manner of most birds' eggs. The female lays two large eggs. The first she hands over to the male bird, the other she keeps.
